Center City Seattle is Mayor Nickels' strategy for encouraging economic growth, transportation, new housing, and great urban neighborhoods in the downtown core and the nine areas immediately around it.

In terms of geography, jobs and density, Center City represents the core of the region. By 2024 it is estimated that this area will produce 57,000 new jobs and over 24,000 new housing units.

Many exciting projects are planned for Center City in the next few years.

Center City Seattle Neighborhoods

David Dixon

David Dixon leads Goody Clancy's* Planning and Urban Design division. David's work as an urban designer has been honored by the American Institute of Architects (AIA), the American Society of Landscape Architects, the Congress for the New Urbanism, the Society for College and University Planning, and other organizations. He will be the 2006 chair of the AIA's national Regional and Urban Design Committee and is a member of the AIA's National Sustainability Task Force.

David served as 2003 President of the Boston Society of Architects (the local AIA Chapter) and chair of the 2003 national conference on "Density: Myth and Reality." He has been invited to speak about revitalizing America's downtowns and neighborhoods by the AIA, the Mayor's Institute for City Design, the Congress for the New Urbanism, and the Society for College and University Planning. He also served as a juror for the AIA's Regional and Urban Design Honor Awards and is one of five national advisors of the AIA's Regional and Urban Design Committee.

Dixon is a frequent writer about urban issues, including recent chapters on university-sponsored revitalization (published by the Lincoln Institute for Land Policy and Great Cities Institute) and urban design issues related to homeland security (MIT Press).

Dixon earned a Bachelor of Arts from Wesleyan University, a Master of Architecture from University of Pennsylvania, and a Master of Urban Design from Harvard University.
